FRAUD ALERTS

From Chase Bank

Watch out for investment scams

Investment scams often happen over a period of time, with scammers waiting patiently until they gain your trust before recommending a great opportunity. They can even set up convincing-looking investment platforms that show big gains before they eventually disappear with your money.

How it can happen:

My “friend’s” investment tip looked like a golden opportunity

A guy friended me on social months ago. We had mutual friends from grad school. Talking crypto was our thing, but we also often spoke about our wives and kids. One day, he shared a screenshot of how much he’d made on crypto, so I checked out the website and downloaded the app. I watched it for weeks, seeing it grow and I thought it couldn’t hurt to start small.

Over the next few weeks, my dashboard showed good gains, so I made several more deposits. Because it kept getting better, I ended up making an additional investment of $23K.

Then suddenly, I wasn’t able to access to my account anymore. No one was returning my phone calls, not even my “friend.” There was nothing I could do because the cryptocurrency didn’t exist. It was all a scam.

FRAUD ALERTS

I wish I'd known:

- Investment scams can unfold slowly. Scammers build relationships over time before making a move.
- Many scams start on social media, where you're prone to trust someone if you have a mutual connection.
- Websites and apps can be much more sophisticated than you might expect.
- You can check out the background, including registration or license status, of those recommending or selling an investment at investor.gov.
- Treat crypto, Zelle®, checks, wires, cashier's checks, transfers and gift cards like cash. Once scammers get the money, you probably won't get it back.

Additional tips:

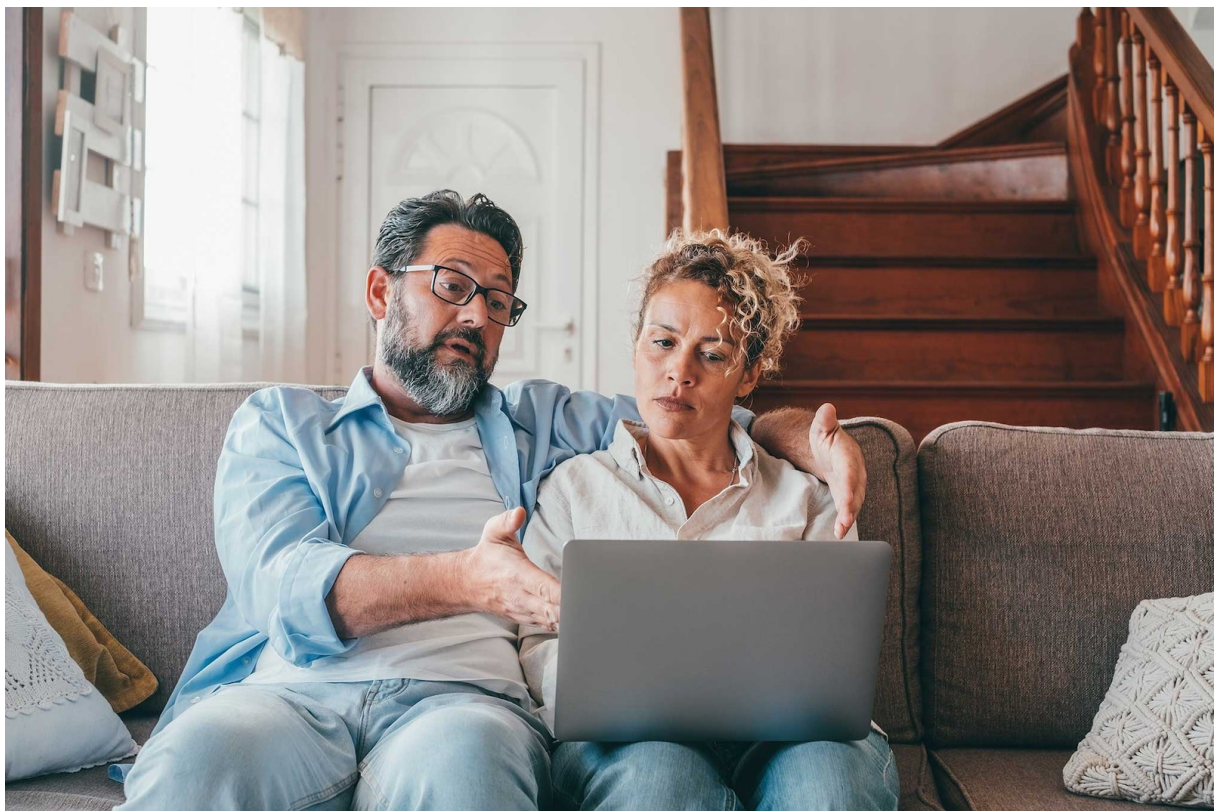

- Scammers are advertising on social media and social marketplaces. Whenever possible, shop through official websites and be cautious of deals that seem too good to be true before sending any money.
- Scammers can make caller ID, emails and texts display as messages from your bank or other businesses. If you are ever unsure, end the conversation and reach out to the company directly through their official website.

FRAUD ALERTS

From Chase Bank

Watch out for fake job offers - otherwise known as money mule scams

While you may think terms like “money mule” or “money laundering” refer to the drug trade, scammers have brought this movement of illicit funds into the corporate world. Unsuspecting “mules” are now often jobseekers applying for what appear to be legitimate job postings from legitimate companies. At some point in the hiring process, the “mule” is asked to receive and transfer money, usually from compromised accounts or through fraudulent checks, keeping a portion for themselves as compensation.

FRAUD ALERTS

How it can happen:

I found a job posting for a well-known company in my field on a major job site. Without giving it a second thought, I submitted the application and was contacted to do a video interview. It all went well, and I was offered the job with a nice signing bonus.

Before I started, my manager emailed that HR had doubled the amount of my bonus by mistake. He instructed me to go ahead and deposit the bonus check and to just use Zelle® to send back the overpayment amount. I assumed it was an honest mistake and certainly wasn't going to make waves with my new boss, so I deposited the check and set up three different Zelle® payments. Lucky for me, my bank flagged the Zelle® payments as being unusual and blocked them. It turns out the job listing, the job, the bonus, and the bonus check were all fake.

Help protect yourself

No honest potential employer will ever send you a check to deposit and then tell you to send part of the money back. Honest employers will also never ask you to pay to get a job. Anyone who does is a scammer.

You can also look up the name of the company or hiring manager along with the word "scam" or "complaint" to see if there's any red flags.

Remember that scammers are sophisticated and they know how to use technology, social media, and they even pay for ads to lure prospective
